News from the AYM Executive Board

Our Chair, Jacqui Belfield-Smith, has had another busy month in which she represented the AYM as part of a panel discussing partnerships and early intervention, at the Youth Justice Summit alongside colleagues from the Youth Justice Board for England and Wales (YJB), Youth Endowment Fund, ADCS and NHS England.

Pictured right, is Jacqui at the Summit, congratulating Keith Fraser, on his confirmed appointment for a further 2 years as the Chair of the YJB. Well done Keith, the AYM looks forward to continuing our productive relationship with you.

Jacqui was also able to meet with Claudia Sturt (pictured left) and wish her the very best in her new career, expressing appreciation, on behalf of the AYM, for her 2 years as Chief Executive at the YJB where she has steered the YJB into a new sense of purpose and ensured that children are placed at the centre of our youth justice work and reflected in national policy.

Of course, work for the Executive Board is ongoing and Jacqui will be attending a Parliamentary round table, chaired by Baroness Louise Casey on Monday May 22nd.

The event will mark the launch of a joint Commission on Young Lives and Manchester Metropolitan University report on girls and young women at risk of violence and exploitation, including in and around criminal gangs which will be published the same day. The Report draws on a 5 year Manchester Metropolitan University research project working with over a hundred girls and young women who have experienced violence and harm. It includes findings from expert evidence sessions and policy discussions and puts forward policy proposals and recommendations to prevent girls and young women coming to harm and to support them to succeed.

Nick Jeffreys and Michael O'Connor, AYM portfolio leads for safeguarding have been working with other members of the Executive Board to respond to consultations from the Youth Custody on reviews of some of their policies. All AYM responses to consultations can be found on our website aym.org.uk or by clicking here

The Executive would also like to remind readers that our AYM Summer Conference and AGM take place on 22nd June, if you haven't already registered for a place please do so by clicking here Full details of the conference can be found on the following page.

Youth Justice Sector Improvement Partnership

The YJSIP is in the process of finalising its Year End Report for 2022-23 activity and programme plan for 2023-24.

Highlights from the feedback and evaluation of the past year's activity include, of our Peer Review Leadership training event in March participants said:

'Excellent, dynamic, interactive delivery: Nothing to fault, develop or improve', and in response to a recent YJSIP Peer Review Report, a receiving service strategic leader commented, 'It's really invaluable for services to have the capacity to learn and reflect from others and the report is a clear and concise outline of the findings. Thankyou for the time and effort you've put into it'

Youth Justice SEND Quality Awards

Congratulations to Swindon Area Partnership

Swindon Area Partnership has been awarded the Youth Justice SEND Quality Lead Award with a Child First Commendation and applauded by the SEND QA assessors for 'making significant and sustained progress in terms of developing productive and effective relationships between partner organisations, supported by a Child First vision of service provision that goes beyond the Youth Offending Team.'

The assessors noted that joint working with the SEND Team is highly effective, as evidenced by protocols, EHCP tracking, regular meetings and internal training. The commitment to securing the best possible outcomes for children with SEND in youth justice pathways is tangible.

Co-located professionals from Welfare, Speech and Language Therapy and CAMHS ensure that screening is proportional and appropriate to identified needs, and targeted support provision is actioned quickly and effectively and recent staffing appointments (a new re-settlement post, for example, and a dedicated post-16 ETE worker) ensure continuity of support from the community into custody and from custody into the community.

Child First practice extends deep into provision for children who offend, including assessment procedures that embrace and inform youth resilience and identity development.

Congratulations to Swindon!

The next Child First Seminar will be presented by St. Helens and Camden will focus on prevention and takes place at 12:30 on 24th May.

Youth Justice Oversight Framework

YJB Thanks AYM Members for their Contribution

The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales (YJB) has written to the AYM thanking us for AYM members' contribution to the development and launch of the new Oversight Framework.

The YJB anticipates that the framework, together with the revised terms and conditions of grant, will enable the Youth Justice Board to engage more effectively with the youth justice sector, both with local youth justice services and their key partners across England and Wales.

The YJB also stated the framework will be fully evaluated in 2026, in the meantime continuous feedback is welcomed; sessions involving the AYM will be used to help facilitate this feedback.

In developing the framework, the YJB fully recognise that the youth justice system is a complex landscape, involving numerous services, organisations, and agencies. All these need to work in partnership to achieve the system aims of preventing offending and reducing reoffending and truly realise the best outcomes for children, families, communities, and victims.

The framework provides clarity on how the YJB's monitoring function is fulfilled, outlining how oversight of local youth justice services is undertaken and delivery across the wider system understood. The YJB will be working together with services and partners to drive up performance against outcomes. The letter notes that achieving the confidence of youth justice services and the partnerships is essential in supporting this, and welcomes the role the AYM has undertaken in supporting this aim.

The framework outlines the approach the YJB will take to overseeing the performance of youth justice services, bringing together in an overarching performance framework, an outline of:

- the mechanisms used for oversight of and assurance against performance outcomes
- how compliance against the terms and conditions of the youth justice core grant (provided to local YJSs on an annual basis) is confirmed
- how effective practice across the system will be identified
- when and how support is provided to drive up standards in delivery
- the responses to persistent poor performance and/or noncompliance against the terms and conditions of the youth justice core grant.

The AYM will be considering methods to assist in feedback on the framework to ensure a national perspective takes account of local variations. If you have anything you would like to contribute to that ongoing feedback, please contact your regional representative.

YJB Business Plan 2023-24

The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales (YJB) has published its business plan for 2023/2024. In a letter to the AYM and other stakeholders, the Chief Strategy Officer Jamie Bennett stated:

'We will continue to meet all our statutory functions and reprioritise our finite resource to focus on the areas we believe will make the biggest difference to children: taking a stronger role in driving performance across youth justice services and wider partnerships. As an organisation, we are strengthening how we bring together data, intelligence and insights so we can better monitor the youth justice system and improve outcomes for children who receive support from youth justice services. We will continue to focus earlier upstream and recognise the importance of early intervention and prevention. We have made a commitment to becoming an anti-racist organisation. As well as addressing disparity, and the consequences of racism, in the system – which will be an intrinsic part of all we do - we will internally challenge our systems, policies and processes.'

The YJB reinforce its commitment to developing a child first youth justice system. There will also be targeted work focussing on four areas:

- Courts,
- Police
- Partnerships to reduce serious youth violence and exploitation, and
- Education.

Supporting Children who have Experienced Developmental Trauma

Research in Practice has published a 'Frontline Briefing' for frontline practitioners, practice supervisors and social work managers. The term 'developmental trauma' is used throughout to reflect the layered impact of ongoing trauma on a developing child; the terms 'complex trauma' and 'relational trauma' are also commonly used in this context.

The briefing brings together knowledge and resources on working in a trauma-informed way with children who have experienced trauma and their parents or carers. It focuses on developmental trauma, which arises as a result of early and repeated traumatic experiences, such as abuse and neglect, within a child's important relationships.

The paper provides an overview of developmental trauma and outlines key approaches for working with children and their parents or carers and signposts open access resources that practitioners and parents and carers can draw on. It focuses on younger children, but many of its messages are applicable across all age groups.

HM YOI Cookham Wood

HM Prisons Invokes Urgent Notification

HM Chief Inspector of Prisons, Charlie Taylor, has written to the Lord Chancellor and Secretary of State for Justice, Rt Hon Alex Chalk KC MP, to invoke the Urgent Notification process as result of an unannounced inspection of HMYOI Cookham Wood between 4th and the 20th April, 2023.

The letter states that the previous inspection in 2021 had identified Cookham Wood as an ‘an institution with significant problems’, requiring ‘support to be provided to enable improvements’. Inspectors had identified low staff morale, standards, and expectations, and a lack of energy and creativity that could engage and motivate children to use their time at Cookham Wood usefully, despite holding only half the young people it was resourced to hold. Leaders needed to find ways to move beyond reactive and limiting approaches to managing difficulties.

The urgent notification advises the Secretary of State that the latest inspection has identified:

‘a failure to address the sustained decline in standards at this high-risk establishment and have no other option but to issue an urgent notification’.

Seven reasons for the decision are listed and include amongst others:

- A complete breakdown of behaviour management which has escalated poor behaviour and widespread weapon making,
- High levels of segregation, with 90% of children subject to ‘keep apart’,
- Normalisation of solitary confinement,
- A lack of cohesion in leadership,
- Widespread acceptance of low standards throughout the institution,
- Inadequate education, skills and work provision, and
- Despite a rich resource of staffing, the inspectors found significant staffing shortfalls in some areas, indicating that much of it was currently wasted, underused or in need of reorganisation to improve outcomes at the site.

Charlie Taylor notes that inspectors:

‘met many staff who cared about the children at Cookham Wood and wanted to deliver a good service to them, however they had lost hope that improvements were possible’.

The Youth custody Service has responded to the urgent notification by stating it is ‘aware of issues raised in the site’s inspection and are providing support to the site to help manage the complex needs of its young people. The site is implementing several actions to drive improvements’.

Common Sense Policing

The Home Secretary Suella Braverman gave a speech at the Public Safety Foundation to set out her ethos for common sense policing. Talking of the increased number in police officers, in some areas to unprecedented high levels, she said, 'More police, means more flexibility for forces to do what makes sense locally'.

The Home Secretary stated 'Everything that our police officers do should be about fighting crime, catching criminals, and keeping the public safe.' 'we must all work towards rebuilding public trust and refocusing on the public's priorities.'

More police on our streets; better police culture; higher standards; more effective policing; focused on the public's priorities; making use of all appropriate powers; pursuing good old fashioned criminal justice rather than social justice; relentlessly focussed on fighting crime, catching criminals, and keeping the public safe. That is the policing that the decent, hard-working, law-abiding majority, up and down this country, can get behind and have confidence in.'

Supporting Children's Compliance on Community Supervision

Academic Insight

HMI Probation has published its latest Academic Insight by Dr. Mairéad Seymour, a senior lecturer in the School of Social Sciences, Law and Education at Technological University Dublin, in which the concept of compliance is considered and strategies that 'pro-actively support and encourage substantive compliance by children and young people' are explored.

The author notes that there has been 'a notable shift in England and Wales away from enforcement towards engagement in policy discourse and practice guidelines' and identifies the crucial importance of establishing positive working relationships with children in order to promote and encourage compliance. It is recognised that in order to achieve 'legitimacy', practitioners need a range of skills, time and persistence and importantly 'genuine concern and interest' in the child they are supporting.

In considering compliance, the author notes the importance of early and regular communication and that practitioners must adopt mechanisms to help overcome potential barriers to engagement, such as time and venues of supervision and providing assistance with transport where necessary.

The author notes that 'Substantive compliance is more likely to evolve where children and young people are motivated by normative reasons such as perceiving the system, including their treatment within it, as procedurally fair and legitimate.'

Young People in Transition in the Criminal Justice System

Evidence Review Published

The Alliance for Youth Justice (AYJ) has published an evidence review regarding young people's transitions in the criminal justice system. The review sets out the policy context for transitions and summarises existing research evidence and data; examining the experiences of children and young people turning 18 years of age while in contact with the justice system, exploring issues spanning the youth and adult criminal justice systems and wider support systems.

The review is part of a three-year Transitions Project by the Alliance for Youth Justice (AYJ), funded by Barrow Cadbury Trust and aims to develop understanding and recommendations for policy and practice by viewing critical issues that affect children in the youth justice system that continue to impact on them in young adulthood. The project has three priority thematic focuses: racial injustice, safeguarding young people at risk, and custody.

The literature review considers all aspects of transition from the youth justice system to adult provision and highlights the change in practice adopted by professionals as a result of children perceiving to mature to adulthood. It notes however, the growing awareness of vulnerability of those transitioning into adult provision and the review includes evidence that proposes extending support for children to 25 years of age to replicate that support offered to looked after children, and those commentators such as the Convention on the Rights of the Child that recommend that:

'children who turn 18 before completing a diversion programme or non-custodial or custodial measure be permitted to complete the programme measure or sentence, and not be sent to centres for adults.'

The review found racially minoritized children are disproportionately likely to transition from a youth to adult justice system, are less likely to be supported through the transition and that the voluntary and community sector are able to bridge the gap between statutory services during the transition.

Can You Provide Further Insight?

The AYJ will be holding an Expert Seminar on Wednesday 7th June, 14:00-17:00, at the Halley, Haggerston, London and will be hybrid, to gain insight from professionals involved with working with racially minoritised children and young people and those transitioning to adult service provision. If you are interested in participating in this Expert Seminar please contact mia.edwards@ayj.org.uk

The AYJ is also holding a Youth Voice Focus Group (in person) on Wednesday 10th May from 14:00-17:00, in-person at The Halley, Haggerston, London, in order to widen its understanding of the experiences of racially minoritised young people in contact with the justice system as they transition into adulthood. If readers know of children or young people aged 16-25 with such experience, please contact sagib.deshmukh@ayj.org.uk

Research into Desistance from Offending

Youth Justice Staff Volunteers Required

Danna-Mechelle Lewis from Northumbria University is undertaking research, supported by the Ministry of Justice and HMI Probation to identify the factors that support desistance from offending and the outcome measures that better support that understanding.

Do you Case Manage or Supervise Children and Young People?

Do you have things to say about the way things work now or how they might work better when supporting children and young people move away from offending? You may be eligible to take part in a workshop that could help improve the way we target resources aimed at tackling reoffending. The researchers are interested in understanding which outcome measures are needed to better understand desistance and reductions in offending for children, young people and adults to prevent offending and reoffending and to ensure that individual needs are sufficiently targeted.

You may qualify if you are aged over 18 years and currently work in case management or the supervision of children and young people within the youth offending service,

Potential Benefits: Participating in this study will help research into understanding from the frontline, what impacts our ability to best support the ongoing process of desistance from offending, both positive and negative; and what measures are needed to be put in place to address this

Being involved Means: - Attending an online workshop along with other volunteers - Talking about your everyday experiences of working with young people on supervision.

How long will it take?: please allow 1 to 1.5 hours

Where will it be held?: the workshop will be held online

When will it be held?: Late May, and June (excluding Bank Holidays).

This research has been ethically approved by HMPPS and Northumbria University.

Understanding Barriers to Restorative Justice

Why me? Publishes report

Why me?, a national charity that promotes and delivers restorative justice has published a report based on a three-year project focused on improving restorative justice for young people and young adults.

The aims of the project were to develop a Youth Justice Services: Good Practice Guide which was published in December 2022, and to publish a policy recommendation report. This report is the result of research, informed by young people and young adults, and provides evidence about the barriers to young people and adult's engagement with restorative justice.

The project worked with youth justice services, young offender institutions, with police and crime commission-funded restorative justice services, and explored disparities in access to and the uptake of restorative justice for young people and young adults from ethnic minority backgrounds.

In interviews with young people and other stakeholders 'Why me?' found:

- There was a distinct lack of awareness of what restorative justice is and the availability of the service. Many young people and young adults had not heard of restorative justice.
- The term restorative justice can be confusing to young people and young adults who have no prior knowledge of it.
- There is a lack of formal processes through which young people and young adults can access the service.
- One of the key findings from the work focusing on disparities in the uptake of restorative justice for young people and young adults from ethnic minority backgrounds was the lack of trust in services. This was particularly prevalent when the police officer in charge of a case was the person who is offering information about restorative justice.

The report contains ten recommendations for:

- The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales,
- The Ministry of Justice,
- Regional probation services,
- HM Prison and Probation Services,
- HM Inspectorates of Prisons and of Probation,
- The creation of a national reporting framework to increase accountability and understanding of impact of restorative justice, and
- A national action plan for restorative justice championed by a dedicated minister, to improve national coordination and oversight of provisions for victims and offenders.

Understanding Ethnic Disparity in Reoffending Rates

The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales has published a report following independent research that explored why reoffending rates among children are higher among some ethnic minority groups.

The research involved statistical analysis of reoffending data from England and Wales, interviews with children from England as well as focus groups with youth justice service practitioners.

The report 'Understanding ethnic disparity in reoffending rates in the youth justice system: Child and practitioner perspectives report', focuses on the qualitative strand of the research, consisting of 19 interviews with children who have offended, and three focus groups with 22 practitioners from Greater London, East and West Midlands and North West England.

All interviewees were asked about their experiences of interventions to prevent reoffending, factors that contribute to reoffending and the support required for children from different ethnic minority groups to prevent reoffending.

The authors advise that there is also an analysis of reoffending data report which should be considered alongside this report. The research findings illustrate four key thematic drivers of ethnic disparity in offending rates for children:

- Marginalisation of individuals and communities - Nearly all children interviewed had been excluded from school prior to, or as a direct result of their first offence. Poverty and social class were key issues highlighted by both practitioners and children that influence offending and reoffending rates. These background factors contribute to a system in which ethnic minority children were overpoliced but under protected.
- Individual, institutional, and systemic bias - Children involved in crime are more commonly treated as adults – especially those from ethnic minority backgrounds. A lack of diversity among the police and courts system was felt by many interviewed to underline systemic racial bias.
- Weaknesses in prevention and intervention - Building strong, trusting relationships with children was viewed as a prerequisite to delivering effective interventions. Where this did happen, children spoke positively about their interactions with caseworkers. A shortage of wraparound services was identified as a potential driver for reoffending.
- Negative experiences of the wider youth justice system - Lack of information for children navigating the youth justice system is reported to be a driver of ethnic disparity in reoffending rate, exacerbated by negative experiences of police custody and inadequate legal representation as reported by many children, and the failure of sentencing to account for children's needs and experiences means interventions to reduce reoffending are not as effective as they could be.

The report makes a number of recommendations for practitioners and policy makers to address these issues.

New Chair of HMCTS Announced

Sir Richard Broadbent has been appointed as the new chair of the HM Courts and Tribunals Service (HMCTS) Board. Sir Richard succeeds Tim Parker whose tenure ended in December 2022, and current interim chair Victoria Cochrane.

The appointment comes as HMCTS finalises the government's £1.3 billion reform programme of courts and tribunals. The programme has already delivered a range of benefits for users, including the introduction of online civil money claims, online probate applications and the implementation of remote hearing technology in over 70% of all courtrooms.

The Board is responsible for overseeing the leadership and direction of HMCTS and plays a vital role in making sure the organisation effectively delivers the aims and objectives set by the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice and the Senior President of Tribunals.

Police Given More Time to Investigate Crime and Protect the Public

The Home Office has announced that the police are to be given more time to prioritise victims of crime and bring criminals to justice under new rules announced today to cut unnecessary red tape when recording crime.

Victims reporting multiple offences will have more support from police, as officer time is freed up to focus on bringing justice rather than on duplicative record keeping. It follows a National Police Chiefs' Council (NPCC) review which found that 443,000 officer hours are spent filling in unnecessary forms and burdensome administrative tasks - time that could be better spent cutting crime and keeping our streets safe.

All reported crimes for a single incident will now consistently be recorded under the 'principal offence', rather than as multiple entries on a database that effectively re-records the same incident. The police will continue to pursue all offences involved, understanding how they are linked, as part of their thorough investigative work.

Police response to sexual abuse

A report following the joint investigation into police responses to sexual abuse and safeguarding victims from risk of honour based abuse by His Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary and Fire & Rescue Services (HMICFRS), the College of Policing and the Independent Office for Police Conduct (IOPC) has undertaken an investigation following a super-complaint submitted by Tees Valley Inclusion Project, which is:

'concerned that ethnic minority victims of sexual abuse receive a particularly poor service, which doesn't take sufficient or appropriate account of the specific risks and vulnerabilities they face.'

The report states that investigators were unable to gather compelling evidence that would either prove or disprove this concern due significant gaps in the data collected by the police as well as quality concerns and the lack of in-depth consideration of differences in experience based on ethnicity or vulnerability connected to honour-based abuse.

Investigators spoke to four ethnic minority victims of sexual abuse who had experienced honour-based abuse and professionals from relevant specialist support agencies. Almost universally, interviewees said:

'the police don't sufficiently take into account vulnerability connected with honour-based abuse when responding to sexual abuse cases.'

Enhanced Case Management Evaluated

The Youth Justice Board for England and Wales has published the Phase 1 report of its evaluation of Enhanced Case Management (ECM) in the South West of England and is calling for all YOT Partnership Boards to read the report.

ECM is a trauma-informed, psychology-led approach to working with children in youth justice service. Grounded in the 'Trauma Recovery Model', it support practitioner to take account of early attachment, trauma, and adverse childhood experiences (ACEs) when enabling engagement with children and planning and delivering interventions.

The report explores lessons from the implementation of ECM & sets out the benefits for both children and services including perceived reductions in offending and improved outcomes for children.

Data on reoffending is due in part 2 of this evaluation, however children and practitioners report that ECM is having a positive impact.

The model is already used throughout Wales and the report recommends that ECM should become business-as-usual for the rest of England.

Shortage of Appropriate Adults for PACE Interviews

The BBC has reported that there is a shortage of appropriate adults (AAs) to support children and vulnerable adults during police interviews.

The National Appropriate Adult Network (NAAN) told the BBC that demand for AAs is increasing and that it believes there are many cases involving vulnerable adults that slip through the net.

Chris Bath, chief executive of the NAAN said:

'AAs are a critical protection to ensure people are treated fairly by police. But the gap in identifying vulnerable suspects remains massive.'

Following a freedom of information (FOI) request to forces across England and Wales, the NAAN found police had recorded the need for an AA in 7.3% of adult detentions in 2021, up from 5.9% in 2019. However, the charity is reported to believe:

'a more realistic figure could be as high as 39%, which would mean as many as 200,000 detainees a year not receiving essential support.'

Legal Challenge from Teenager Placed in Hostel

A legal challenge, to be heard in the High Court in July, has been brought against Lambeth Council by a young 19 year old girl, regarding her placement by the authority in a hostel whilst she was 17 years of age and homeless.

The girl argues that the placement was unlawful and that the local authority failed to provide accommodation as directed under section 20 of the Children Act 1989 and information necessary to make an informed choice.

The action follows confirmation by the Department for Education that it will regulate supported accommodation for 16 and 17 year olds looked after by the local authority.

New £10 million grant round for positive activities

The Youth Endowment Fund has opened a new £10 million grant round. The grant will fund projects that use positive activities as a means to protect children from violence and engage them in other support services. It will test the impact of sports, arts and adventure and wilderness activities on preventing violence.

The fund aims to invest between £9 million and £10 million to fund and evaluate five or six large-scale projects in England and Wales. Projects must support children involved in, or at high risk of becoming involved in, the youth justice system that deliver one of the following positive activities:

- sports
- the arts (including music making, arts and craft, dancing, drama, creative writing and poetry, photography, painting, pottery, sculpture or new media/digital arts)

They were giving evidence in response to the recent SEND and AP Improvement Plan. Daniel mentions in his initial speech about the delays in accessing specialist support and how this may affect a pupil needing this professional intervention, drawing attention to this underfunded part of the SEND sector.

Manchester Centre for Youth Studies 2023 Annual Lecture

Social harm and violence in children and young people's lives, a crisis of mattering?

17:30-19:30

Childhood and youth should be periods of security, joy and wonder. Yet for too many children and young people living in Britain today, this is not the case. This lecture will explore a range of social harms that undermine children and young people's potential to flourish. In particular, it will discuss the nature and scale of serious violence between young people, and consider the extent to which such violence is being driven by a crisis of mattering. The lecture will examine some of the shortfalls and limitations of contemporary responses to violence, and reflect on how we can build safer and better societies for children to grow and flourish.

Dr Irwin-Rogers is a Senior Lecturer in Criminology, The Open University. There will be an opportunity for a Q & A about his work and an open discussion on the topic of youth, social harm, and violence shortly after the lecture.

The lecture will be followed by a drinks reception and a book launch for the major new MCYS publication, Gray, P., Jump, D. and Smithson, H. (2023) Adverse Childhood Experiences and Serious Youth Violence. Bristol: Bristol University Press. For more information about this publication click here
